Courtenay, Nearing Completion, Reflects A New Look In Schoolhouses

Rising on the site of the first public school in Charleston, the Meeting Street School built in 1851, is Courtenay School, the newest public school in the city and the most modern in design. The $400,000 building designed by Augustus E. Constantine with Englehardt, Englehardt and Leggett as consultants, faces on Meeting Street occupying the area between Mary Street and Wragg Square. Of reinforced concrete and brick, it contains 16 classrooms, library and cafeteria-auditorium. It will offer grades one through seven. Classes are expected to begin in September. The photo above shows the main entrance and center section of the school. (Staff Photo.)
